

Bioarchaeology of Marginalized People: Uncovering the Hidden Histories of the Forgotten

History has long been dominated by the narratives of the powerful and privileged, leaving the stories of countless marginalized individuals untold. However, in recent years, a new field of study has emerged that seeks to shed light on these overlooked lives: bioarchaeology.

Bioarchaeology is the scientific study of human remains from archaeological contexts. By examining skeletal remains, researchers can uncover valuable insights into the lives, health, and experiences of past populations.
