Valery Bryusov (1873-1924) was a poet, critic, and translator who is considered one of the founders of Russian Symbolism. His early poetry was characterized by its декадентство (decadence), but he later turned to more classical forms. Bryusov was also a prolific translator, and he introduced Russian readers to the works of many European poets, including Edgar Allan Poe, Charles Baudelaire, and Paul Verlaine.

Anna Akhmatova (1889-1966) was a poet, translator, and critic who is considered one of the greatest Russian poets of the 20th century. Her poetry is often characterized by its emotional intensity and its focus on personal experience. Akhmatova was also a vocal critic of the Soviet regime, and she was forced to endure many hardships during her life.

Osip Mandelstam (1891-1938) was a poet, essayist, and critic who is considered one of the most important Russian poets of the 20th century. His poetry is often characterized by its complexity and its use of metaphor. Mandelstam was arrested and exiled several times by the Soviet regime, and he eventually died in a labor camp.

The poetry of Bryusov, Akhmatova, and Mandelstam has had a profound impact on Russian literature and culture. Their work continues to be read and studied today, and they are considered to be among the most important poets of the 20th century.
