On the morning of September 11, 2001, the world watched in horror as the Twin Towers of the World Trade Center collapsed in New York City. The attacks on the Twin Towers and the Pentagon, as well as the crash of United Airlines Flight 93 in Pennsylvania, resulted in the deaths of nearly 3,000 people.

In the aftermath of the attacks, the media played a significant role in shaping the public's understanding of the events. However, in the years since 9/11, there have been growing concerns that the media has not fully and accurately reported on the attacks.

In his book "Towers of Deception," author David Ray Griffin argues that the media has engaged in a systematic cover-up of the true facts surrounding 9/11. Griffin alleges that the media has suppressed evidence that points to the involvement of the U.S. government in the attacks.

Media Suppression of Evidence

Griffin provides a number of examples of the media's suppression of evidence in the years since 9/11. One example is the media's refusal to report on the numerous eyewitness accounts of explosions in the towers prior to their collapse. These eyewitness accounts suggest that the towers were brought down by controlled demolitions, rather than by the impact of the planes.

Another example of media suppression is the failure to report on the evidence that Flight 93 was shot down by the U.S. military. This evidence includes radar data that shows Flight 93 making a sharp turn before crashing in Pennsylvania. It also includes eyewitness accounts of a missile being fired at Flight 93.

Media Complicity in the Cover-Up

Griffin argues that the media's suppression of evidence about 9/11 is not the result of simple negligence. He believes that the media is complicit in the government's cover-up of the attacks.

Griffin points to the fact that many of the major media outlets are owned by large corporations that have close ties to the government. These corporations have a vested interest in maintaining the government's narrative of 9/11.

Griffin also points to the fact that many journalists are afraid to challenge the government's account of 9/11. These journalists fear that they will lose their jobs or be subjected to ridicule if they question the official story.

The Consequences of the Cover-Up

Griffin believes that the media's cover-up of 9/11 has had a number of negative consequences. He argues that the cover-up has made it difficult for the public to understand the true nature of the attacks. This has made it easier for the government to continue its policies of war and aggression.

Griffin also believes that the cover-up has damaged the credibility of the media. The public can no longer trust the media to provide accurate and unbiased reporting. This has created a climate of distrust and suspicion.

In "Towers of Deception," David Ray Griffin makes a compelling case that the media has engaged in a systematic cover-up of the true facts surrounding 9/11. Griffin provides a wealth of evidence to support his claims.

Griffin's book is a must-read for anyone who is interested in the events of 9/11. It is a work of deep research and analysis. It is also a call to action. Griffin urges readers to demand that the media be held accountable for its role in the cover-up of 9/11.
